Graphic Description of Perils and Adventures of Georgian's Party in Getting Out of Mexico

Hillside's Note—Rev. J. P. Lancaster, new pastor of the Methodist church at Lawrence, Ga., was until last December preacher and school teacher at Torreon, Mexico. He and his family, with several hundred other people, foreign and American, were compelled to leave the republic last night by the revolution. This article, written by Rev. Lancaster for "The Constitution," is a graphic description of the perils and adventures he and his party underwent in getting out of the Mexican territory.

Mr. Rev. J. P. Lancaster.

On August 28, 1913, the state department at Washington sent advice to General Carranza, asking for the northern division of troops, advising all foreigners to leave the country as soon as possible. This message was delivered by Dr. Ryan to Consular Agent C. Chastagne on October 1. Mr. Carranza then set about to get a train from Torreon to the coast.

The city was in the hands of the Federal troops, but the rebels, who were two-thirds through which we must pass, were held by the constitutionalists. The rebels were not willing for the train to leave till they could reach the Federal side and get out on a train on the territory of the empire.

September 6 the Federal troops General Talon and later the rebels associated San Pedro and General Carranza with military and consular troops went over this road to build up the track to Monterrey. It was hoped to reach there in a week and then to proceed to the coast. The rebels were not willing to let us go to the coast, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels. We were not willing to go to the coast by the rebels, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels.

It was not until we had passed these men that we were allowed to pass. We were not willing to go to the coast by the rebels, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels. We were not willing to go to the coast by the rebels, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels.

There was nothing to do but wait, as we were told. We were not willing to go to the coast by the rebels, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels. We were not willing to go to the coast by the rebels, but we were forced to go to the coast by the rebels.
